ORIENTATION QUESTIONS
SEXUAL ABUSE IN AN INSTITUTION

You have decided to report sexual abuse to the Inquiry and want to do so in writing.
This is a courageous and important step.

Your report will help the Inquiry find out what made sexual violence in childhood possible and what politicians and society must change so that children will be better protected from abuse in the future.

Please use your own words when you write to us. It won't matter if you can't remember everything. To help you with your writing, you will find some questions starting on page 2 that you can use to help you with your report, but naturally, you don't have to use them. Some of the questions will be of less importance to you or not relevant at all. Only you can decide what you want to tell the Inquiry.

You can add your contact details to the report or remain anonymous. If you do tell us how you can be reached, then the Inquiry will have the opportunity to contact you if we have any questions.

After you send your report to the Inquiry, you will receive formal written confirmation that the report has been received by the Inquiry.

Your report will be treated confidentially. We take protecting personal details very seriously. We have implemented organisational and technical measures to ensure that the data protection regulations are always observed.

This might well be the first time you have spoken about the past and the abuse you endured.
We are fully aware that the memory of suffering can be stressful and painful.
Please contact our service hotline if you feel that you need support to deal with the stress.
